Qualifications: Taken NVQ level 2 and 3 in Bricklaying, currently studying Level 4 Site Management

Location of Study: Guildford College

I was attracted to a career in construction because I like the idea of being my own boss. I had been working on a building site during the summer I enjoyed the money and the sense of responsibility so when the company I was working for offered me the chance to stay with them and get qualified I jumped at the opportunity.

I would defiantly recommend the construction industry to anyone who is prepare to work hard but earn a good living. Advise I would give to anyone just starting out would be to stick with it some days in college can seem a bit dull but it gets better if you are prepare to put the work in.

The best bit about the training was having a chance to meet other people who were at the same level as me. I came from a small firm and it was good to spend time with other apprentices who were working on the same issues.

My future plans are to complete my NVQ level 4 in site management whilst being supported at work and then I would like to continue training and move higher up in the company.

The construction industry has been good to me so far. If the typical academic route is not for you then the construction industry gives you lots of opportunities to study and get qualified whilst you work.
